

 CARN-ALARA 2019

CARN & ALARA CONFERENCE CALL

On behalf of the two of the foremost and long-standing global action research networks, The Collaborative Action Research Network (CARN) and The Action Learning, Action Research Association Ltd (ALARA) global network and the Department of Pedagogy of the Faculty of Humanities and Social Sciences of the University of Osijek, Croatia we kindly invite you to our International Scientific Conference

Imagine Tomorrow: Practitioner Learning for the Future

At this conference, we provide practitioners from around the world with an opportunity to exchange their experience and knowledge gained through action research and exploration of social changes starting from their bold visions of the future. In short, the main topic of the conference is Imagine Tomorrow: Practitioner Learning for the Future.

We believe that learning is a process of not only changing and creating the world, but also changing and creating ourselves. We therefore actively challenge discourses that reduce learning to knowledge transference. In this process, we learn not only what we already know, but also what we need to create. This way, we direct our learning towards the future – to the development of those potentials that are necessary for the creative shaping of the future world.

We invite you to share what you have learned by conducting action research in various areas of practice at a conference organized by two of the longest running networks in this field: the Collaborative Action Research Network (CARN) and Action Learning, Action Research Association Ltd (ALARA). We welcome contributions from any setting where action research, practitioner research and action learning are practised, including, but not limited to: health and social care, community youth and social work, business, education, indigenous research, feminist research, management, engineering etc.
